The laboratory medicine is responsible for providing test results that are critical to diagnosing and managing patients. So, laboratory is a vital part of the healthcare team and is involved in utilization, operational efficiencies and improving patient outcomes. Laboratory medicine consists of various specialties such as clinical chemistry, immunology, hormones, hematology, microbiology, serology and clinical pathology. Laboratory tests may use different kinds of body fluids such as whole blood, plasma, serum, urine, stool, semen and other body fluids like cerebrospinal fluid, pleural fluid, synovial fluid etc. Blood is the most commonly used specimen for testing in the clinical laboratory. Blood consists of two main parts - a fluid portion (called plasma, which contains the dissolved ions and molecules) and a cellular portion (the red blood cells, white blood cells and platelets). Most clinical chemistry analytes are found in the plasma. Part of the preparation of blood for testing these analytes involves removing the cells.

This is done by centrifugation of the sample to pack the blood cells in the bottom of the collection tube and allow removal of the liquid portion for testing. These plasma or serum samples in test tube (after pasting the barcode) is loaded in the automated analyzer for testing.
